Bringing an effective school infrastructure of people and facilities to the Marist funding is at the heart of how Trinity Catholic School has responded and attempted to gain value for money. Marist funding not only follows each student, but is used to bolster school-wide change and improvements in quality of teaching and learning. Strong and inventive leadership combined with consistent management are needed to make the Marist funding system work. The most significant transformations that are happening at the school are the hardening up of the leadership structure; the construction of a more personalised and flexible curriculum pathway; the use of relevant appraisal; and the recruitment and promotion of outstanding staff to deliver the vision that the Marist funding demands. The school believes that these system shifts are more effective than one-off initiatives.

Nationally, 34% of disadvantaged pupils achieve 5+ A*–C GCSEs (including English and Maths). With all students, a core action in the shift to improve student attainment has been to make literacy a priority; setting high expectations and articulating a clear vision for all pupils to become literate. This is a whole-school project: in every department. The school does not believe that investing in more ICT and technology is the solution; nor is one-off tutoring on its own; nor is flooding the classrooms with TAs or employing them for individual student support justified by any recent research. Trinity has used the Sutton Trust research findings as a basis for its strategy in this area.

The school will use the increase in the Marist funding to stimulate new ideas and new ‘kick-start’ initiatives such as Academic mentoring; a focus on marking and feedback; metacognition, collaborative learning, homework; additional curriculum enrichment opportunities; more home contact and support for families; community support including links with pupil premium students in feeder primary schools; an innovative Maths programme; specialist consultants; possible additional tutors in English and Maths; bespoke CPD; and the usual holiday and after-school revision sessions for student not making expect progress borderline pupils. However, the school believes that the Pupil Premium needs a broader whole budget theme – the vision behind it should pervade all colleagues’ mindsets- teaching and non teaching.

The impetus provided by the Marist funding will also be used to work collaboratively with neighbouring schools and the community at large on initiatives to maximise the value of premium and taking a whole-school approach rather than spending it on individual projects that can often benefit only a small number of students. Raising the bar for all students can transform the lives of those on FSM and narrow the gap.
